Editorial

It gives me great pleasure to present Volume 1, Issue II of Vimarsh Pravah Research Journal, continuing our commitment to promoting interdisciplinary discourse in the fields of humanities and social sciences. This issue brings together a wide array of research contributions that reflect critical thought, cultural insight, and academic depth.

The articles featured in this edition explore significant themes such as cultural heritage, educational diversity, philosophical reflections, and contemporary policy analysis. Topics include studies on multiculturalism in education, philosophical parallels in management, teacher-student dynamics, and psychological well-being. Several papers also delve into cinema, literature, and narrative studies, offering fresh perspectives on cultural expression and representation.

In addition to Indian contexts, this issue includes a relevant international case study on environmental and water politics in South Asia, extending the journal's reach beyond national boundaries. Contributions in Hindi further enhance the richness of this edition, addressing tribal ecological consciousness and financial inclusion—areas that are deeply relevant to India's socio-economic discourse.

As Editor-in-Chief, I express my sincere gratitude to all the authors for their scholarly contributions and to the reviewers and editorial board members for their diligent efforts in maintaining the academic rigor of the journal.

Thank you.

Warm regards,

Dr. Girish Shastri
