Editorial

It is great pleasure to present Volume II, Issue I of Vimarsh Pravah Research Journal. This issue reflects the journal's ongoing commitment to encouraging high-quality, interdisciplinary research that addresses contemporary social realities while remaining rooted in historical, cultural, and theoretical perspectives.

The research articles included in this issue engage with themes such as governance and administrative traditions, international relations and cross-border cultural practices, public health and education, indigenous knowledge systems, cultural heritage etc., these studies offer critical insights into both enduring social structures and rapidly changing global contexts.

A significant strength of this volume lies in its emphasis on social justice, inclusivity, and community-centered research. Several contributions examine marginalized communities, indigenous cultures, women's experiences, and persons with disabilities, highlighting the need for informed policy frameworks and sustainable development approaches. The issue also foregrounds the relevance of Indian Knowledge Systems, reinforcing the importance of indigenous intellectual traditions in contemporary academic discourse.

I sincerely acknowledge the efforts of all contributing authors for their scholarly contributions. I also extend my appreciation to the reviewers and the editorial team for their valuable contributions in maintaining academic standards and ensuring the timely publication of this issue.

Thank you.

Warm regards,

Dr. Girish Shastri
